THE Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU) said the Department of Labor and Employment (DoLE) needs to concentrate on creating quality jobs instead of allocating significant resources to a relief program for temporarily displaced workers.

In a statement, KMU Secretary-General Jerome M. Adonis said the P14-billion proposed budget in 2025 for the displaced-worker program, known as TUPAD (Tulong Panghanapbuhay sa Ating Disadvantaged/Displaced Workers), indicates a misplaced focus on low-quality work.

“Instead of funding job creation, the DoLE chose to pour its funds into TUPAD, which merely offers temporary employment... TUPAD will not fulfill the basic needs of workers. What we need are regular and long-term jobs,” he said.

During DoLE’s budget hearing on Wednesday at the House of Representatives, Labor Secretary Bienvenido E. Laguesma said TUPAD funding took a hit after the Department of Budget and Management (DBM) granted it only P45 billion in 2025 funding, as against its proposed P80 billion.

TUPAD is a community-based safety net initiative that provides temporary employment to workers in the informal sector. It was initiated to provide relief to workers who lost their jobs as a result of the pandemic.

Last year, TUPAD provided emergency employment to over 3 million people. In the half of 2024, it has tallied over a million beneficiaries.

Next year, it aims to help almost 1.5 million.

Mr. Adonis cited the need to fund programs that will improve labor conditions, ensure a living wage, and uphold fundamental labor rights.

The DBM listed DoLE in its bottom 10 government agencies in terms of spending performance in the first half of 2024.

During the budget hearing on Wednesday, DoLE said it had to deal with requests to realign TUPAD funds to the Government Internship Program, creating uncertainty on where to direct funding.

According to DoLE’s action plan detailing its strategy for improving spending performance, it said program implementation peaks during the second and third quarters, which will increase the payment of TUPAD wages and procure raw materials, tools, and equipment for the DoLE Integrated Livelihood Program.

Federation of Free Workers President Jose G. Matula told BusinessWorld via Viber that labor education projects also require funding.

“Labor education is an investment in the workforce. By funding programs that teach workers about their rights, the government is not only protecting them but also promoting productivity and stability in the labor market,” he said, adding that well-informed workers are key to a resilient and competitive economy.

Requests for foreign study leave

Mario, a long-time supervisor is applying for a six-month management program fully funded by a foreign entity. If accepted, he plans to take study leave without pay and promises to apply his key learnings when he comes back. Unfortunately, we don’t have a policy on this. What’s the best thing to do? — Blue Sky.

Take advantage of the absence of a policy. That way, you can be reasonably flexible in your decision-making process. But don’t be trigger-happy. Have an open mind as an instant negative reaction could have a serious consequences on Mario’s morale.

All organizations need a dynamic training program. Unfortunately, not many employers can afford to pay for sophisticated programs, especially those that involve foreign training. The nature of jobs changes almost every day in this globally competitive environment.

The trouble is the scarcity of training resources as companies navigate rapidly changing technology, new business demands, cultural and generational workforce shifts, and the changing nature of work.

IN THE WORKPLACE REY ELBO

ELBONOMICS: Talent wins promotions, but training can fast-track them.

The above list is not complete. But they hint at the urgency of the need for a management development program for everyone. All employees, regardless of rank and stature, must develop new competencies to respond to the changes. Withhold any training and your people will soon enough risk obsolescence, leading your organization to lose its competitiveness.

Only through the continuous upgrading of the worker skills can an organization maintain its competitive advantage in the industry.

CONDITIONS

Even in the absence of a policy on foreign training, you should approve Mario’s request. If you’re part of the human resources (HR) department, you should be dynamic enough to discover there are many free management programs. Many of them can be accessed online and need not require in-person attendance.

But of course, there’s great appeal in foreign training, as opposed to an online set-up. Thus, I will recommend to management the approval of Mario’s study leave, subject to the following conditions:

One, good work performance. A strong performer gives management confidence that Mario will succeed in such a program.

Two, 10 years of service. Continuous employment is another consideration. It is an important measure of the company’s retention rate. This requirement tells people that they must prove their loyalty to the organization before being allowed to take study leave.

Three, clean record. This means having no violations of the company’s Code of Conduct or other rules and regulations, including minor offenses like absenteeism, tardiness, or non-wearing of company uniform, among others.

Four, the nature of the job. A foreign training program, even if it’s fully funded, should promise improvements in Mario’s work when he returns. He must make the case why such a program is indispensable for his current job.

Five, no sharing of trade secrets. Approval of a study leave does not automatically mean that management will allow the sharing of its vital information or strategy with others in the form of case studies or other means. Prior approval is needed before this can happen.

Six, an agreed employment contract. Such a contract must be signed before Mario leaves for overseas. This contract should require him to apply what he learned from the training program within one or two years. Also consider requiring the payment of a training bond.

Seven, a temporary replacement. Internally appointing a senior person will be necessary to avoid disruption of business operations. This also strengthens the company’s succession and career development plans.

POLICY

Now that you are ready to handle Mario’s situation, prepare to establish a formal policy to handle future cases. Create a new policy that applies prospectively to all workers who may be interested in following in his footsteps. You are establishing a precedent and cannot get away from it.

To avoid any confusion, make this policy part of the company’s career development program and succession plan.

Consult other department managers. This way, it would be easy for you to come out with a dynamic program approved by all managers who may be adversely affected by the absence of people attending foreign training. However, no one can argue against having a training program that requires minimal resources from the organization.
